How is PageGate Used/Customer Quote:

"We have a relatively simple use for NotePage's PageGate. The Credit Union's "core" system has an error monitor agent as an option that will report text-based messages as a result of an error. These errors specifically would result from a failed task within the automated task scheduler. The "scheduler" automates most of the routine events that occur on a daily basis. A failed task requires operator intervention within a period of time or other dependent tasks will not occur. PageGate reads the folder where the errors are written to, and sends the message via email through our Internet firewall to our paging company's email-based paging service. It works great. PageGate I believe provided the flexibility to allow us to adapt to the error monitor's file naming convention."
